CRIMINAL LAWS AMENDMENT (PROTECTION OF CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS) BILL, 2024

MEMORANDUM

This Bill will confirm amendments made by a Presidential emergency decree that was necessitated by the implementation of the Constitutional Court’s judgment in Kawenda v Minister of Justice & Ors. The President’s intervention was rendered more urgent by a court-ordered release of all offenders convicted of statutory rape.

The Criminal Law (Codification and Reform) Act [Chapter 9:23] (commonly called the Criminal Law Code) contains several sections that protect children from sexual exploitation. The sections call children “young persons”, and that term is defined as meaning boys and girls under the age of 16 years. The Constitution, on the other hand, fixes 18 years as the age at which children become adults, so although the Criminal Law Code protects children under the age of 16 it does not provide protection for children between the ages of 17 and 18. As a result the Constitutional Court has declared the definition of “young person” in section 61, as well as sections 70, 76, 83 and 86 of the Code, to be unconstitutional and void.

The main purpose of this Bill is to amend the Criminal Law Code by replacing those sections and extending the Code’s protection to all children up to the age of 18 years, as required by the Constitution. The Bill will also amend the Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act to make it possible for children and other witnesses who cannot talk to give evidence in other ways such as through written statements, signs and other augmentative and alternative communications.

In more detail this Bill provides as follows:

Clause 1

This clause sets out the Bill’s short title.

Clause 2

Provides for shortened references to Chapter 9:07 and 9:23, which will be amended by this Bill.

Clause 3

This clause will alter two definitions in section 61 of the Criminal Law Code. (a) The amendment of the definition of “extra-marital sexual intercourse” will make it clear that child marriages are not recognised as valid marriages; in other words, sexual intercourse between a child and an adult will not be legal even if they have gone through a form of marriage. (b) The new definition of “young person” will extend the Code’s protection to cover all children, i.e. boys and girls under the age of 18 years.

Clause 4

This clause will replace section 70 of the Criminal Law Code, which makes it a crime to have sexual intercourse or engage in other sexual activity with a young person. The new section will differ from the existing one in the following ways:

It will extend the protection provided by the section to cover boys and girls up to the age of 18 years.

It will add a provision stating that if the persons who engage in sexual activity are of a similar age – specifically where the difference in their ages is three years or less – the Prosecutor-General will have to authorise their prosecution before they can be charged under the section. Before authorising a prosecution, the Prosecutor-General will have to consider a report from a probation officer but will not be obliged to follow the probation officer's advice.

It will add another provision making it clear that the section does not limit the provisions of other laws, for example the Children's Act, which deal with the prosecution of children.

Clause 5

The amendments this clause will make to section 73 of the Code are consequential on the new definition of "young person".

Clause 6

Section 75 of the Criminal Law Code prohibits incest, i.e. sexual intercourse between persons who are closely related. This section will update references in the section to marriage laws, taking into account the new Marriages Act of 2022.

Clause 7

This clause will replace section 76 of the Criminal Law Code, which is one of the sections the Court declared to be unconstitutional. The new section will conform to the Constitution.

Clause 8

Deliberately infecting persons with sexually-transmitted diseases was originally dealt with in two sections of the Criminal Law Code. Section 78 makes it a crime for anyone to deliberately infect another person with a sexually-transmitted disease other than HIV; section 79 made the same provision for those who infected others with HIV, but provided for a much heavier sentence to be imposed. Section 79 was repealed by the Marriages Act in 2022, which means that it is no longer a crime to infect other persons with HIV (because section 78 specifically excludes HIV).

This section will amend section 78 of the Code to include HIV among the sexually-transmitted diseases covered by the section.

Clauses 9 and 10

These clauses will replace sections 83 and 86 of the Criminal Law Code, which are two of the sections the Court declared unconstitutional. The new sections will conform to the Constitution, specifically by protecting young persons under the age of 18.

Clause 11

Part XIVA of the Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act provides for the taking of special measures to enable vulnerable witnesses to give evidence in court without undue emotional distress or fear of intimidation. This clause will extend the Part to cover children and other persons who cannot give evidence orally in the normal way, whether through inability to speak or hear or for any other reason, and will allow them to give evidence in writing or by signs or by augmentative and alternative communications. The amendments will permit these incapacitated witnesses to give their evidence through intermediaries – persons who are able to interpret or translate what the witnesses are trying to say – and will enable courts to appoint support persons – relatives or friends to sit with the witnesses and provide them with support and comfort. Intermediaries who are not professional court interpreters will have to take an oath to interpret truthfully what the witnesses are saying.

BILL

To amend the Criminal Law Code and the Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act [Chapter 9:07]; and to provide for matters connected with or incidental to the foregoing
